In 1740, the Vincennes Factory was founded, with support from Louis XV and Madame de Pompadour, to compete with the superlative productions of the Meissen Factory in Germany. In 1756 the factory was moved to a custom-built edifice at Sèvres, chosen as it was conveniently close to Madame de Pompadour's Chateau de Bellevue. The factory was bought by the King in 1759, and Madame de Pompadour was given a free reign to oversee it. Initially producing soft-paste porcelain, from 1770, with the recent discovery of kaolin deposits in France, the factory also began producing hard-paste porcelain.

A similar service, with some matching English Derby porcelain augmentations, is at Harewood House, Yorkshire
