John Archibald Austen (1886-1948) was born in Hythe in Kent and, by 1921, was a member of the Society of British Artists. Often using his wife, Ruby, as a model, much of his early work was strongly influenced by Aubrey Beardsley, but in 1925 he came under the spell of the Art Deco movement, and his style of drawing radically changed to reflect this new influence. The 1920s was his heyday and he was a prolific and successful illustrator for most of the decade.
