Thomas Goode & Co. have occupied 19 South Audley Street since 1845 and first opened their doors to Mayfair's retail customers back in 1875. Designed by Ernest George, 19 South Audley Street was transformed into London's foremost tableware emporium by Thomas Goode's son, the enterprising William Goode, who travelled the world not just in search of the finest porcelain and bone china designs, but also providing a uniquely personal service to Europe's great families; in the process endowing the business with a calibre of clientèle that endures to this day.
